New Red China Drive Against Israel Takes In Three Continents, Was Forecast By Israeli Deputy Defense Chief

Red China has launched an all-out campaign against Israel in Asia, Africa, and Latin America.

Propaganda, psychological warfare, and person-to-person persuasion at high levels are being used by the Communist Chinese in something of a saturation effort, writes Seymour Freidin, executive editor of Foreign News, of the New York Herald Tribune, from London. The Chinese are pushing their points so hard that some non-Arab Moslem nations quietly communicated the gist of the campaign to Westerners.

The key objective seems to be to try to destroy the successful Israeli technical assistance projects in under-developed countries.

At the same time, Red China is striving to show that it is a better protector of Arab interests than the Soviet Union, and a better friend of all under-developed countries.

Intertwined is a neo-colonialist theme in which Jews of the United States are singled out as instruments of imperialist policy. One of the anti-Israeli lines, repeated now in Asia, is that U.S. Jews plotted Israeli infiltration into under-developed areas.

The concept, the Red Chinese line goes, was co-ordinated in Washington with the blessing of the U.S. government.

Soviet official policy, Red China troubleshooters tell their listeners, is to soft-pedal this joint U.S.-Israeli infiltration of Asia and Africa, because the Russians are so intent on dealing with the Americans that they have abandoned substantive support for former colonial-held countries.

The Chinese campaign has begun to make some impact. The easiest mark is the Arab world, where any anti-Israeli comment, especially from a large nation, receives immediate credence, says the New York Herald Tribune. Some Arab leaders have pointedly noted that Red China was the only power in the non-Arab community to have recently sent a message of support to the Palestine refugees.

Ever since the Red Chinese undertook an active interest in Africa, Asia and Latin America — roughly some months ago — they have sought to undercut the Israelis. The new and coordinated campaign dates from Premier Chou En-lai's big African swing that began on December 13, 1963.

In conversations with African leaders he encountered, Mr. Chou used unrestrained criticism of Russia's role in sinking at Israeli [illegible] Some of the Africans parroted him pointedly that the Russians were anti-Israeli in policy and anti-Jewish at home.

When this rebuttal occurred, Premier Chou changed the subject. But his diplomats and propagandists who followed him, kept it. There, outside purely Arab-led states, it keeps finding favor. The same was true in Asia, where a very special situation prevails because of basic fear or deep respect of Red Chinese power.

In Latin America, Red Chinese activists and their supporters promote the theme of Jewish wealth stifling working-class ambitions. They have not hesitated to use national extremist and Nazi tracts and arguments to inflame prejudices, concludes Mr. Freidin in his dispatch from London.

On September 1, 1963, the following appeared in the New York Herald Tribune as a dispatch from Jerusalem, headed, "To Israel's Arab Enemies Add A New Foe, Red China": Israel, surrounded by hostile Arab nations, may face a new threat — Red China. Deputy Defense Minister Shimon Peres said that Peking's intentions in the Middle East could well be the threat of the future.

"I would not venture to make prophecies, but I would say no wars such as the (1956) Sinai campaign are visible on Middle East horizon," the forty-year-old Mr. Peres said.

"But the problem now coming up is whither the Chinese giant is heading.

"I would not take it upon myself to exclude the possibility that one day China will aspire for influence in the Middle East as she has done in other parts of the world."

It was the first interview granted by Mr. Peres since Premier Levi Eshkol took over earlier in 1963 from David Ben-Gurion. Mr. Peres is a protege of both leaders, and has traveled to the United States to negotiate for U.S. aid and supplies to boost Israel's defenses.

"Israel's basic aim is Middle Eastern peace, and my country will continue to strive for and explore every possible avenue to attain this goal," Mr. Peres said.

Mr. Peres said the diminished threat of new Arab-Israeli wars was not the result of the partial nuclear test-ban treaty but of the reduced world tensions which made possible the accord.

"I believe most wars represent errors," he said. "It is, therefore, difficult to foretell when someone may make an error, particularly when the Arabs have singled out war as a system for solution of their problems."

Mr. Peres said "the crucial question in the Middle East is not simply how to [illegible] but [illegible] up [illegible] wars.

"Our biggest anomaly is how to prevent [illegible] of arms. The only

Revisionist Leader, Great Linguist, Fiery, Compelling Orator, Once Reviled By Zionists As Militant Fascist Chief, Waited 24 Years For Burial In Israel As Hero And Army Organizer

The bones of a militant Zionist who died in 1940 were carried up Broadway in a horse-drawn hearse, followed by 1,000 marchers.

After the procession and a memorial service, the remains of Zeev Jabotinsky were put aboard a plane bound for Israel, reports the New York Herald Tribune. Jabotinsky and his wife, who died nine years after he did, were reburied in Jerusalem near the grave of Theodor Herzl, founder of Zionism.

Jabotinsky was so militant that he split with the mainstream of Zionism when it was a radical movement itself. He was the organizer of the Jewish Legion that fought alongside the British in Palestine in World War I, and of the Jewish underground resistance that fought against the British in Palestine after the war.

At the time of his death, he was in the United States trying to organize a Jewish army that would fight with the British against Nazi Germany.

In his will, drawn in 1935, thirteen years before the establishment of the State of Israel — he stipulated that he was not to be buried [illegible] government there ordered it. It took sixteen years for a Jewish government to order it, because Israeli leaders had been among Jabotinsky's opponents while he lived. Premier Minister Levi Eshkol of Israel gave the expected order on March 16. Jabotinsky's followers are in the main opposition party in Israel.

The procession began with a short service at the Riverside Chapel, 76th Street and Amsterdam Avenue, in New York. Jabotinsky's coffin was then carried down to a glass-walled hearse drawn by four dapplegrey horses.

The hearse, according to one of its coachmen, is the only one of its kind in the city. It was made in 1875 and is owned by the Chateau Theatrical Co. The last time it was used was in a television play a year ago. It was used for a funeral five years ago in Montpelier, Vermont, says the New York Herald Tribune. The deceased had ordered in his will that his coffin be carried in a horse-drawn hearse.

For the ceremony, two six-pointed Stars of David, cut out of white cardboard, were taped to the glass sides of the hearse. The grand marshal of the parade, Israel Posnansky, directed the loading of the coffin.

It was a tight fit. As the pallbearers pushed, the horses moved up. "Hold the horses!" shouted Mr. Posnansky, and the coffin was successfully loaded. Mrs. Jabotinsky's coffin followed in a conventional limousine. Mr. Jabotinsky and his wife, who died in 1949, were buried at the New Montefiore Cemetery, in Farmingdale, L. I.

In the parade were veterans of the Jewish Brigade and the Zion Mule Corps (also in the Legion); a Jewish War Veterans contingent; girls and boys from Betar; the youth group that Jabotinsky organized; and several Zionist groups, including Jabotinsky's Zionist-Revisionists.

Large crowds gathered on Broadway at 76th Street and at 91st Street, the end of the procession. The marchers used the uptown lanes. The elderly people who usually sit in the sun on the concrete islands in the middle of Broadway gathered at the intersections to watch the hearse go by.

At 91st Street, the procession turned east on its way to the Young Israel of the West Side Synagogue, near Amsterdam Avenue, for the memorial service. The hearse, the limousine, and a drum and bugle corps passed through several police barriers, but the rest of the crowd was held behind them.

The coffins were unloaded and stood in the street, when all of a sudden there was a break through the police barriers. The crowd fought to get through the door of the synagogue, says the New York Herald Tribune. One person made it — Rep. Kenneth B. Keating, Republican, of New York. The the defenders of the synagogue shut its iron gates and peered out at the crowd.

Police and uniformed youths from Betar took over and barred the door. They let small groups in, a few at a time. Meanwhile, Jabotinsky's son, Eri; Eri's wife; and their son, and daughter waited patiently outside with the coffins.

Eri was arrested by the British several times for helping Jewish refugees enter Palestine before Israel was created after World War II. He is a visiting professor in Ethiopia, where he is Dean of Science at Haile Selassie I University.

After the service, the coffins were flown to Israel. They were reburied after a torchlight procession from Tel Aviv to Jerusalem.

The Prime Minister, with officials of the French government, had met the funeral plane at Orly Airport. Many American Jewish leaders flew in two additional jet planes for the reburial rites in Jerusalem.

New York Jewish leaders who called upon their members to participate in the New York rites included Dr. Max Nussbaum, president of the ZOA and co-chairman of the National Committee for the Jabotinsky Memorial; and Edward Sharf, newly elected president of Bnai Zion.

Philip M. Klutznik, former U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, co-chairman of the National Committee for the Jabotinsky Memorial, announced plans for the memorial rites from its headquarters, 55 W. 42d Street.

Vladimir (Zeev) Jabotinsky, born at Odessa, Russia, in 1880, became a Zionist leader in Tsarist Russia before he was twenty-five years of age. During World War I, as a journalist stationed in London, he began those efforts for a Jewish legion and for an independent Jewish state which were to come to fruition only after his death.

In 1936 he warned the Jews of Europe about the danger in the rise of Hitlerism, and early advocated the mass evacuation of Jews to Palestine, says the New York Herald Tribune. After the outbreak of World War II, he came to the United States to work for the organization of a Jewish army to fight Hitler.

He died at Camp Betar, in Hunter, N. Y.

Jabotinsky was a fire-eating orator of charm and magnetism and the ability to speak in eight languages. As a writer he was an essayist, and a journalist of distinction, working as a foreign correspondent and turning from one language to another with ease and

WORLD JURISTS CONDEMN ANTI-SEMITISM AS SIGN OF "SERIOUS MORAL MALAISE IN SOVIET SOCIETY"

The International Commission of Jurists said that Jews were being used by Moscow as "scapegoats" to divert attention from wide-spread "capitalist corruption" in the Soviet Union, says the New York Times.

In a 43-page study of "economic Crimes in the Soviet Union," the Commission's staff noted that the Soviet press placed a "thoroughly disproportionate emphasis" on Jewish defendants.

The report was published in the summer issue of the Commission journal. The Commission, a private organization recognized by the United Nations, represents more than 45,000 lawyers in most non-Communist countries.

An "insidious and sometimes subtle propaganda campaign has been directed against the Jewish people of the Soviet Union," the study found. Attention is directed toward Jews, it continued, because the "primary objective of the Soviet policy is to divert attention from the real truth."

"The real truth is a veritable cancer in the vitals of ideology—capitalistic corruption even within the party and in local economic administration, and a spectacle of amazing fortunes made quickly," the report said.

The author of the study saw only an indirect link between anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union and the situation when Jewish defendants by the score in cases of economic crimes. There is anti-Semitism but it is not sufficient to warrant "an accusation of organized discrimination or persecution," the report stated.

"The religious difficulties faced by the Jews in the Soviet Union are in many respects shared by people of other religious faiths," it added.

The study went on to note, however, that there probably was some anti-Semitic prejudice at all levels of Soviet society, says the New York Times. This, it continued, may be used by the authorities to render the widespread economic offences unpopular.

The report said such a view, would be the most charitable that could be taken of the anti-Semitism that seems to be a factor in Soviet policy.

The hope was expressed that Soviet authorities would realize "the real and grave injustices which must result from such a course."

"Anti-Semitism," the report concluded, "represents the most dangerous form of racialism in the world; no question of expediency can ever justify its use as a political, social, or economic weapon."

The study found that the concentration of both law and propaganda on the suppression of economic crimes evidenced a "serious moral malaise in Soviet society."

This, it noted, comes at a time "when the stage reached in post-revolutionary development of a Communist state should, in theory,

The wedding will take place Sunday, August 8, at five o'clock, at the Beth Sholom Synagogue, Rabbi David Monson officiating.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lavinson, 4141 Bathurst Street, announce the forthcoming marriage of their daughter, Miss Ethel Myrna Levinson, to Joseph Isaac Burke, of Belleville, Ont., son of Mrs. Rose Burke, 2908 Keele Street, and the late Harry Burke, to take place on Sunday, July 26, at seven o'clock, with Rabbi G. MARRIAGES

KONOPNY-FISCHTEIN

The marriage of Miss Goldie Deborah Fischtein, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Motek Fischtein, 33 Blue Forest Drive, to Harold Irving Konopny, son of Mrs. Biva Konopny, 261 Grace Street, and the late Samual Konopny, was solemnized on June 16, at six o'clock, at the Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue; Rabbi Joseph Kelman officiating, and Cantor Sholom Weinstein assisting. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. Her fitted gown was of white, ribbon lace; with a jewel neckline, and three-quarter-length, bell-shaped sleeves. The bodice was embellished with seed pearls, and blue crystals, and rhinestones. The skirt had a fish-tail back; and the long train was of appliqued tulle. Her full, tulle-illusion veil, appliqued with lace, was attached to a pearl-beaded headpiece. She carried a bouquet of pink roses, with white orchids and stephanotis. Mrs. Harry Goldlist, sister of the groom, was the matron of honour. She wore a gown of blue crepe, with a beaded, blue lace, bodice. Her headpiece was a blue-tinted rose. She carried a bouquet of pink roses in a variety of shades. The maid of honour was Miss Edna Fischtein, sister of the bride; and the bridesmaids were Esther Weinblatt, Rochelle Blumenfield, Ava Giller, Donna Cotton, and Fern Wunch. All were sleeveless blue; peau de soie gowns, with blue, printed chiffon bodices, and jeweled necklines; and carried bouquets of roses like that of the maid of honour. The maid of honour wore a cape, which fastened in front, with a bow. Her headpiece was a matching blue band; and the bridesmaids' headpieces were printed blue chiffon bows, on blue peau de soie bands. Pauline Goldlist, aged nine years, niece of the groom, was a junior bridesmaid. She wore a full, blue, peau de soie skirt; and a white lace over-blouse. Her head-piece was a matching blue bow and her flowers were a bouquet of pink roses in a variety of shades. Harry Goldlist, brother-in-law of the groom, was best man. The ushers were Morris Fischtein, brother of the bride; Matthew Ash, cousin of the groom, Roland Pinsit, Gabor Garai, Marvin Malamed, and Stanley Glazer. Barry Goldlist, aged seven years, nephew of the groom, was the ring-bearer. The standards decorating the synagogue were round, with pink roses and white carnations, each being set off with deep pink-tinted grapes and vines; and three pink candles. The centerpieces at the bride's table were white and gold-shaded cupids, with vases of pink-tinted grapes, and roses, and white carnations; and pink candles. The tablecloths were white lace over blue. Mrs. Fischtein, mother of the bride, wore a gown of beaded blue ribbon lace. The deep, scooped neckline was adorned with raised flowers of blue ribbon. Her flowers were a wristlet of pink orchids. Mrs. Konopny, mother of the groom, wore a blue lace gown, with silver and crystal beads, over a blue chiffon skirt; with a wristlet of orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Harold Konopny spent their wedding trip visiting the World's Fair, in New York; and at the Concord Hotel, at Kiamesha Lake, New York; the bride departing in a pink silk suit, adorned with wooden beads, and a white organza hat and white accessories.

Woman Gives Bronze Head Of Kennedy To Brandeis U.

A bronze head of the late President Kennedy, sculptured by Boris Lovet-Lorski, has been given to Brandeis University, at Waltham, Mass., by Mrs. Zulie Gerstenzang Akston, of New York. The 28-inch-high sculpture will be placed on a granite base in the new Leo Gerstenzang Science Quadrangle which is expected to be completed in the summer of 1965. Mrs. Akston, who commissioned Mr. Lovet-Lorski to create it, provided the initial funds that launched construction of the multi-million dollar quadrangle. She is the widow of Leo Gerstenzang, founder of Q-Tips, Inc.

Mr. Lovet-Lorski, an internationally known sculptor, recently completed a bronze head of the late John Foster Dulles, former U. S. Secretary of State. This work now stands in the Dulles Airport in Washington, D.C. Among his other sculptural achievements are the U.S. War Memorial in Manila, and a bronze head of Franklin Delano Roosevelt created for the City of Paris. He has held one-man sculpture exhibitions in many U.S. cities, including Boston, New York, Washington, Chicago, and Los Angeles, and is represented in permanent collections at the British Museum, in London; the Metropolitan Museum, in New York; and in other galleries.

The Lithuanian-born sculptor is a member of the National Academy of Design, and a Fellow of the National Sculpture Society.

grace. He founded the militant Zionist Revisionist Party, and also the Jewish Legion. He organized the underground army of Palestine, the Haganah, for which he was sentenced to a term of hard labour, then was pardoned, and expelled from the country by the British. He was reviled by Zionist leaders in the U.S. and Canada and held in contempt as a Fascist agitator by many who have just honored him at burial rites in New York and in Israel. When Jabotinsky came to Montreal he spoke in out-of-the-way, small, humble quarters. The Canadian Jewish Review published an editorial which criticized the "big frogs in little puddles" for their disinclination to hear him speak. He did speak and to many, at His Majesty's Theatre.

answer to that question is a balance of weapons."

Politically, Mr. Peres represents the youthful generation which is moving up in the ruling Mapai party. It is a moderate force which calls for more planning in the national scheme of things.

He said there was a "very simple answer" to the question of how the East and West could reduce Middle Eastern tensions without sacrificing their competitive positions.

"If the two world blocs were to compete with each other by providing economic aid rather than submarines and aircraft, which the Arabs received from the Soviet bloc, the element of competition would prevail but the danger to peace would lessen.

"If economic aid were the basis of competition the inhabitants of Egypt — and not only its government — would have reaped the fruits of such a constructive enterprise."

JABOTINSKY THEN

The following editorial appeared in the Canadian Jewish Review of February 1, 1935:

Thanks to Temple Emanu-El, Montreal Jewry will soon enjoy its most interesting experience in a long while, when on February 11, this community will be honored by a visit from Vladimir Jabotinsky, easily the most magnetic personality in world Jewry today. Listening to his address, his audience will behold before them a man loved and admired for his place in Jewish life and letters, and, at the time, a man hated by thousands of Zionists the world over as the guiding spirit of the Revisionist Zionists.

Jabotinsky organized the Jewish Legion at the beginning of the World War and after the War he formed the Jewish self-defense corps that battled in the 1921 riots in Palestine, for which latter service the British Government sentenced him to fifteen years in prison at the Fortress of Acco, releasing him soon after when Sir Herbert Samuel was High Commissioner. He was an able military leader and organizer but not the sort of whom Trotsky contemptuously said: "What kind of a general is he? He has only read about six books in his whole life."

Jabotinsky is a gifted linguist and a distinguished littérateur and is well-known as a translator of Edgar Allen Poe's poems into Hebrew and Russian; of Dante's Divine Comedy into Hebrew; and of Bialik's Hebrew poetry into Russian. At present in the United States, he is telling the Americans that he belongs to that generation of Russianized intelligentsia which, in its early teens was brought up on James Fenimore Cooper and Bret Harte.

Doubtless, in Jewish cafes from Odessa on around the world and back again, it has been declared times without number that Jabotinsky has more culture in his little toe than this one or that one has all over. His Russian culture is due to the fact that he comes from an assimilated Russian Jewish family interested in Russian culture essentially, unlike those who lived in the ghetto and received a Jewish education. It was not until he was past twenty that he began the study of Jewish history and Hebrew, but it is characteristic of the man that no age would be too late for him to apply himself. "I want to learn," he is saying today.

However Zionist forces throughout the world may regard Jabotinsky, the man, as head of the World Zionist Revisionists he is the leader of forces thought to be evil and dangerous to the upbuilding of Palestine. He is considered a most disturbing element and his party is blamed for troubles with organized labor in Palestine, for the use of extreme measures to gain an objective, for making radical demands upon Great Britain as the Mandatory over Palestine, and for violent tactics unwelcome and greatly disapproved by the generally conservative groups within Zionism. In their estimation, Jabotinsky, the poet, is above all Jabotinsky, the agitator.

Right now, Jabotinsky is agitating for a New Deal for Palestine, and his party is demanding from England a thorough revision of the ideas and methods which that country has been applying to Palestine; and from the Jews the cessation of class war by the practice of arbitration. He believes that in the face of radical change in Zionism, all the laws and the whole administrative practice of Palestine need revision to cope with present conditions demanding change in attitude toward immigration, land reclamation, colonization. His party is circulating a world-wide petition for a New Deal already signed by six hundred thousand people who actually want to go to Palestine, and addressed to the Mandatory and the governments of countries where Jewish distress is a state problem.

Wherever Jabotinsky goes, his approaching visit divides the populace amusingly. There are the open-minded, and those with closed minds; the independent, and the opportunists always on the safe side, looking out for self. The visiting speaker is a gifted man of charm, brains, feeling, imagination, and courage. There are few like him within Zionism or outside it; within Jewry or outside it. And big frogs in little puddles who may not deign to do him honor, ticket themselves perfectly without lessening in the least the unmistakable greatness of a rare personality. I.i.c.

The American Orthodox Rabbi

By Victor Geller, director of Rabbinic Placement at Yeshiva University, in New York

The Orthodox rabbinate in the United States is one of the least understood professions in our contemporary society. The man in the street has a fairly clear picture of the doctor, the lawyer, the accountant, the engineer. The rabbi, however, remains a somewhat vague spiritual social worker, a "do gooder" in divinity.

Who is the man in the pulpit? You wonder who is this man who stands before your congregation, dressed in a conservative manner, and addresses you in an assured way. You may ask yourself what motivations he had in becoming a rabbi; what characteristics of mind and heart caused him to choose this profession; how does he compare to your impressions of the bearded sages of yesteryear.

It is true that in recent years, the image of the rabbi has been enlightened by the mass communications media — newspapers, radio, television. They have shown him in both religious and general community environments. At times, though, this exposure has tended to reflect, rather than clarify a man's thinking about the rabbi.

"Semicha," or ordination, marks the culmination of a process of religious education which began usually in his early youth. Semicha is less an academic degree than the final phase in the total development of a religious personality. Ordination represents a sense of personal fulfillment rather than an ecclesiastic license to occupy a pulpit.

Semicha also represents an extension of the rabbi's personal commitment to Torah. It is a means through which he can satisfactorily fulfill a paramount precept "mitzvah" of "lilmod u'lelamed" to study and teach his fellow Jews.

Finally, the young man also seeks semicha because he wants to help people. He wants to help them Jewishly and generally. He wants to bring to their problems the special answers that derive from Jewish teaching. He seeks to impart to them the sense of Jewish prospective with which they should meet the challenges of life.

What does the rabbi do all day? This is a favorite question among congregants. It might be said that the rabbinate is like an iceberg; most of it is not readily visible. In general, the Orthodox rabbinate may be divided into three areas.

The first area is the conspicuous pulpit work. The rabbi preaches sermons, speaks to Sisterhood, Men's Clubs, and Youth Groups. He conducts adult classes on all levels ranging from elementary Hebrew to advanced lectures in Talmud. He appears before many Jewish and general organizations outside of the synagogue. He represents the congregation in many communal and civic programs. He writes articles for his synagogue bulletin, Anglo-Jewish newspapers, and for scholarly journals. He consoles the bereaved, visits the sick, and counsels newlyweds.

It is at this point that the manifold duties of the rabbi disappear from view and take on a more confidential character. The rabbi ranges across the entire vista of human affairs in trying to help people. An example of but a few of the day-by-day problems that confront the rabbi will illustrate this aspect of his work:

In a Canadian suburb, the rabbi's doorbell rang at 2:00 A.M. He found Provincial Police there, who told him that there had been a serious automobile accident on a nearby highway, a man had been killed in the accident. His personal effects showed him to be a Jewish man who lived not too far away. The policeman asked the rabbi to accompany him to break the news to the man's family.

Late one evening, a rabbi in the Midwest received a telephone call from a distraught mother. Her teen-age son had run away from home. Sometime after midnight, the rabbi found the boy in the railroad station and had to spend several hours with him to persuade the boy to return home.

One morning a rabbi in Queens received a phone call from a man threatening to commit suicide. He kept the man talking on the phone for an hour during which time he scribbled a note to his wife, instructing her to go out and contact the authorities so that they could intercept this man.

A troubled father came one day to a rabbi in Long Island. He told the rabbi that his son had become involved with a group of car thieves. He asked the rabbi to intercede with the authorities on his behalf.

A young housewife came to her rabbi's study in New England tearfully asking him to do something about her marriage which was floundering.

Marital, emotional, and other counselling is on the increase for the rabbi. He has become, as have religious leaders of other faiths, the "economy" psychologist. The rabbi, of course, seeks to refer problems to the appropriate professional agencies. He is finding, however, that many people are not prepared to take their personal problems further than the rabbi's study. It is rather interesting to note, that there appears to be far less psychological stigma attached to taking a problem to the rabbi than to a marriage counsellor, psychologist, or psychiatrist.

We could stop at this point and say, "dayenu", enough. For the Orthodox rabbi, however, there is still a third and vital task. That is the endless task of bringing his congregants closer to personal observance and practice of their faith. He is troubled when the Sabbath is violated, when kashruth is ignored, or when a holiday is neglected. He is distressed when he sees a mourner at the morning service for a kaddish sitting lost among his brethern. The Jewish illiteracy of his congregation stands out in the rabbi's mind, in painful contrast, to its high level of secular and general knowledge. His frustrations are many; he battles convenience with conviction.

The Orthodox rabbi is the director of a religious "travellers aid society." He is constantly striving to reunite his people and its faith. In this, he attempts to develop a dual sense of Jewish continuity, horizontal and vertical. On the horizontal plane, he tries to create a sense of "am Yisroel", of the special kinship that binds the Jew of Peoria with the Jew of Paris, the Jew of Yonkers with his compatriot from Yemen. The vertical continuity he seeks lies in telescoping the generations and centuries, so that the Gaon of Vilna, Rashi, Maimonides, Rabbi Akiva, and Moses are real, close and alive. This continuity binds the contemporary Jew to the multitude who stood before Sinai, the returnees from Babylon, the fighters of the Warsaw ghetto, and the young Sabra reclaiming the Negev.

To all of these tasks the Orthodox rabbi brings no special ritual or ecclesiastic authority. Judaism does not recognize any absolute theological line separating a clergy from a laity. The authority of the rabbi rests on the twin pillars of profound Jewish scholarship and an abiding commitment to Jewish law and practice. His tools and his goals are the same: belief in God, knowledge of Torah, and love of his people.

The rabbi finishes his sermon. He returns to his seat next to the aron kodesh. You look at him once again and you realize that although he is young, he is the heir of an unbroken tradition of 3,000 years of rabbinic leadership. Through him the sages of antiquity speak to the Jews of modernity in language of eternity.

Ben-Gurion Boycotts Burial Of Israel's Hero

Only one person in Israel — former Premier David Ben-Gurion — announced that he would boycott the reburial ceremony of the Zionist leader and spiritual "father of dependent Israel," Vladimir Jabotinsky, writes Solomon H. Steckoll, from Jerusalem to the Toronto Star.

Jabotinsky, who died in New York 24 years ago, was reinterred in Jerusalem on July 9 after full cabinet approval was given to a motion by Premier Levi Eshkol that the remains of Jabotinsky be brought back to Israel.

Well over 1,000,000 people in Israel filed past the bier in Tel Aviv and Jerusalem to pay their last respects to the man whose mission was for Jewish freedom and whose life was devoted to this cause.

Services of remembrance were held in synagogues throughout the country on instruction by the Chief Rabbinate who also asked Jewish communities throughout the world to remember Jabotinsky on this day.

In Israel men and women from all walks of life, and of all shades of political opinion, took part in the state funeral of Jabotinsky on Mount Herzl close to the tomb of Jabotinsky's and Israel's modern-day saint, Theodore Herzl.

Jabotinsky, statesman, humanist, best-selling author ("Samson And Delilah"), poet, linguist, fighter and orator of Churchillian stature, is widely accepted as being the man who more than any other single individual laid the foundation for the renaissance of Israel.

Only Ben-Gurion, who launched an angry attack on the government for its decision to have Jabotinsky reinterred in Israel, would not pay respects to the memory of the man who was his commanding officer in the Jewish Legion during World War I. The Legion was formed by Jabotinsky.

Ben-Gurion, in a series of articles and speeches, bitterly attacked Jabotinsky. Throughout the years that he headed Israel's government Ben-Gurion steadfastly refused to sanction the reburial of Jabotinsky in Israel.

Jabotinsky, who together with Eliezer Ben-Yehuda laid the foundations for the revival of Hebrew as a living language, established the Haganah (self-defence) organization in 1920 during the first outbreaks of Arab riots in Palestine. He was imprisoned by the British for this and deported.

In exile, Jabotinsky, who had already made his mark by forming, with approval of the British government the first solely Jewish army, in 1917, since the defeat by the Romans of Bar-Koseva in AD. 135, continued his battle for the establishment of an independent Jewish state in the Holy Land.

He appeared before international commissions, spoke to heads of states and, after the rise of Hitler, criss-crossed Europe warning Jewry there of the fate awaiting them.

When the British government restricted immigration to Palestine Jabotinsky was the first to organize illegal immigration.

With growing British intransigence he founded the Irgun Zvai Leumi, which waged a militant campaign against the British mandatory regime until the Labor government of Britain was forced to hand over its mandate to the United Nations — which led to the establishment of the State of Israel.
